SL Hit → TP Hit? Market Trap Explained

Idhu oru simple PDF illa... idhu unga trading clarity ku starting point.

PROBLEM :

Most traders think:

“My SL hit... then market went to my TP.”
This is very common.
But the real problem is usually not the market.

The problem is:

- Early entry
- Weak confirmation
- SL placed in a common liquidity area
- No re-analysis after SL hit

SL hit is not the end. It is information.

What To Do After SL Hit

After your stop loss is hit:

- Don't revenge trade
- Don't enter immediately
- Watch market direction
- Check if it was a liquidity grab / stop hunt
- Wait for fresh confirmation

If market takes liquidity and then moves in your original direction, you can look for the next opportunity.

But only enter again if:

- Structure is still valid
- Confirmation appears
- Risk is controlled

Important Line:

Re-entry is allowed only with confirmation, not emotion.

example :

- My stop loss was hit, after which I observed the market closely.
- The move appeared to be a liquidity grab, followed by a strong bullish reaction.
- Since the market continued in my original directional bias, I waited for proper confirmation instead of entering immediately.
- Once a strong confirmation was formed, I re-entered on a retracement — and the trade executed exactly as planned.

RULES TO FOLLOW

- Stop Loss hit → do not react immediately
- First step: observe market direction
- Do not enter without confirmation
- Only trade when confirmation is clear and strong
- If confirmation is not present → no trade
- Wait for price to move in your directional bias
- Follow your system — not emotions
- Maintain same risk discipline

Confirmation decides entry. Not emotion.
